

This image shows a single sheet of white paper designed for handwriting practice. It is divided into four equal rectangular sections by two thick, black dashed lines that intersect at the center. The top-left and bottom-left sections are completely blank white space. The top-right and bottom-right sections are filled with horizontal ruling lines. Each of these ruled sections contains ten sets of three parallel lines: a solid blue line at the top, a dotted blue line in the middle, and a solid red line at the bottom. This pattern of lines repeats down the length of each section, providing a guide for letter height and placement.
