

In 1872, Sterling said there should be a tree-planting holiday. They gave prizes to counties and groups that planted the largest number of trees. On that first Arbor Day, there were about one million trees planted in Nebraska. Other states heard of this and word spread quickly.

